

Encounter

Most participants did not demonstrate dialogue because they may have made assumptions or judgements, did not show curiosity, listen, share about their lives, ask questions, or reflect on the experience.

Engagement

Most participants showed some signs of emerging dialogue through general sharing about their perspectives and social groups, listening with body language, or asking basic questions, yet still had difficulty as a group in forwarding the conversation.

Beginning

The group began to demonstrate dialogue with most participants sharing about personal perspectives and experiences using 'I' language, listening and asking 'Why' questions of each other, and ensuring all voices were heard.

Quality of Dialogue: Video Conferences

Good

Dialogue was present, and the group shared clear and detailed descriptions about their values and personal experiences, analysed influences and impacts, built questions off each other's responses to go deeper into the dialogue, and owned the flow of the conversation together.

Advanced

The complete experience of the dialogue was owned by the whole group; it was fluid, complex, challenging, and inclusive. All participants shared in detail, asked probing questions, and reflected on what was learned and could be improved for themselves and as a group.
